On the other hand, the Journal of the American Medical Association (JAMA) has been the most vocal critic of the industry. In 1997, JAMA published a special issue on the topic of "The Pharmaceutical Industry and the Public Good." The issue was edited by Dr. Robert M. Anderson, a prominent physician and ethicist. The issue contained several articles that criticized the industry's practices, including its marketing, its influence on the medical profession, and its role in the development of new drugs. The issue also contained a special section on the topic of "The Pharmaceutical Industry and the Public Good," which was edited by Dr. Anderson. The section contained several articles that discussed the industry's impact on the public good, including its role in the development of new drugs, its influence on the medical profession, and its marketing practices. The issue was widely read and discussed, and it helped to bring the industry's practices into the public eye.
